Many places and programs have been named or established to honor the legacy of Cesar Chavez and the farmworker movement. What are your thoughts about the role the National Park Service should play in recognizing this history?

The National Park Service has identified significant sites related to Cesar Chavez and the farmworker movement. Do you consider these sites to be among the most significant? What other sites might have similar significance or other associations that the National Park Service should consider?

Our practice is to make comments, including names, home addresses, home phone numbers, and email addresses of respondents, available for public review. Individual respondents may request that we withhold their names and/or home addresses, etc., but if you wish us to consider withholding this information you must state this prominently at the beginning of your comments. In addition, you must present a rationale for withholding this information. This rationale must demonstrate that disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. Unsupported assertions will not meet this burden. In the absence of exceptional, documentable circumstances, this information will be released. We will always make submissions from organizations or businesses, and from individuals identifying themselves as representatives of or officials of organizations or businesses, available for public inspection in their entirety.

Management options that the National Park Service might consider at these and other sites include:

- Ongoing management by the current owners
- Technical assistance to public or private landowners who wish to recognize the work of Cesar Chavez and the farmworker movement on land they own
- Listing of historic sites on the National Register of Historic Places
- Educational or community service programs
- National Park Service management of one or more sites, for example as a national historical park
- National Park Service coordination of a historic trail or tour route

What do you think of these ideas, and what others would you suggest?

What other stories, topics or perspectives do you think the National Park Service should consider in this special resource study?
