The 2015 DC Design House was located in McLean.

End of an Era

The D.C. Design House is no more. The annual style event in which a grand Washington-area home was transformed into a showcase house has closed its doors for the final time.

The board of directors for DC Design House, Inc., the nonprofit that oversees the running of the annual show house, voted unanimously to disband. Citing difficulty getting enough volunteer support, DC Design House co-founder Skip Singleton announced the decision last week saying, "We all want to proudly end the DC Design House on a high note for what we collectively achieved. We are grateful for our all-volunteer staff working hard throughout the years to keep costs low in an effort to maximize our annual donation to Children's."

After discussing a range of ways to continue, the board decided that it was time to end the annual showhouse.

"It's always been more than a month-long event; it was a year-long effort for our dedicated board, executive committee and volunteers," added Singleton. "And we want to thank each and every one of them for making the DC Design House the success it was."

Over the 10-year period of its existence, the effort attracted more than 90,000 visitors and raised more than $2 millions for Children's National Health System.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Republican-led subcommittee indicated the reason for the denial was due to the fact that violence is already a crime and adding any other protected classes would make the law more complicated. Not extending protections on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity sends a message that the protection of the LGBTQ+ community is not as important as that of individuals who experience violence on the basis of their race, religion, or national origin. This very problematic considering that anti-LGBT hate crimes are on the rise, particularly for the transgender community, which has seen an increase of more than 43 percent. Additionally, in 2017 a record number of deaths of transgender people were reported due to fatal violence.

This alarming information is a sign that our existing laws are not strong enough to protect the transgender community. For the legislatures to not consider the spate of violence that is occurring in the transgender community is troubling. Failing to protect a community that is already vulnerable is problematic, especially for youth who identify or have yet to identify as transgender. It fosters an environment that is not inclusive and welcoming, which puts these youth at a greater risk for bullying, harassment, suicide, and violence.

I'm sure that the House of Delegates was not trying to send a message that health and safety of transgender individuals are not important. However, ignoring the problem because it would complicate laws we already have in place is not a step in the right direction. I think we all can agree that time could and should be made to work out these "complications," especially when lives are at stake.
