Additional Property Information

Architecture Setting: Rural

Acreage: No Data

Site Description:

March 2020: The Whitlock House fronts on Brock Road (county road #610) at the northern edge of the Spotsylvania Battlefield. The property is wooded, except for the clearing immediately surrounding the house. It is just inside Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park, the boundary of which was extended to include this and other properties in the 1980's. Private property adjoins the Whitlock House to the west, south and north, while NPS lands border it to the east.

Surveyor Assessment:

March 2020: The Runion House, along with the adjacent driveway, dates to c. 1970, and shares design- and landscaping characteristics with other homes in the area from the same construction period. The house lacks any architectural significance.

The Runion house is recommended not individually eligible for the National Register of Historic Places and does not contribute to the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields National Military Park Historic District.

Historic District Information

Historic District Name:	Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields National Military Park Historic District
Local Historic District Name:	No Data
Historic District Significance:	November 2014: The Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields National Military Park Historic District derives its primary significance under Criterion A in the area of Military as the site of the American Civil War Battles of Fredericksburg (December 11–15, 1862), Chancellorsville (April 27–May 6, 1863), the Wilderness (May 4–7, 1864), and Spotsylvania Court House (May 8–21, 1864). Each of the battles was part of a major campaign initiated by the Union Army of the Potomac against the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia. Together, the battles resulted in more than 100,000 casualties, making the roughly 20-square-mile area over which they were fought the most contested ground of the Civil War. Under Criterion B, the battlefields are associated with defining moments in the careers of the generals responsible for planning and executing the battles, including Union Generals Ambrose E. Burnside, Joseph D. Hooker, Ulysses S. Grant, and George G. Meade and Confederate Generals Robert E. Lee and Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson. Several contributing buildings in the District also possess significance under Criterion A in the area of Health and Medicine for their association with the care of wounded soldiers during and after the battles. The District has additional significance under Criterion A for its association with national trends in battlefield commemoration and preservation during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Finally, a number of resources in the District also possess significance under Criterion C in the areas of Architecture and Landscape Architecture. Criteria Consideration D applies to Fredericksburg National Cemetery, which derives its significance from its association with important historic events and distinctive design features, and Criteria Consideration F applies to the contributing commemorative monuments within the District that possess significance engendered from their age, design, and symbolic values. The period of significance for the District extends from 1768, the date that Chatham Manor was constructed, to the present in recognition of the continuing exceptional importance of Fredericksburg National Cemetery. The District achieved its primary significance during the period between November 1862 and May 1864, when the Battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, the Wilderness, and Spotsylvania Court House were fought.
